

LACEY DONOHUE - RUSSIA - Yesterday 12:05am

33,813 129

RECOMMENDED BY LACEY DONOHUE

Psychotherapist Is Unable to Understand What Medical Insurance Is

Graves Announce Plans To Leave Atlanta For Cobb County [Updates]

Let's Give Our Veterans the Only Thing They Want: A Mission

CBS Retracts Bombshell Benghazi Report Over Crying Source

Monster Typhoon Among History's Largest, Strongest Storms Ever

The Los Angeles Aqueduct Turns 100, or The Mules That Built L.A.

What We Found at Hart Island, The Largest Mass Grave Site in the U.S.

CIA Paying AT&T $10 Million a Year for International Phone Records

Reminder: The Twitter IPO Won't Make You Rich

Meet Virginia's New Sleazebag Governor

'I Am a Sick Motherfucker!': Rob Ford Is Very Angry About...Something

Christie, de Blasio Win Big; Tea Party Loses in Virginia and Alabama

What Are You Wearing for Halloween?

Boston Red Sox Win World Series

Watch the Russian Police Choir Cover Daft Punk's "Get Lucky"

The Russian Police Choir, officially known as the Russian Ministry of Internal Affairs Choir, recorded a video performance of Daft Punk's "Get Lucky." And it's as hilarious as it sounds.

What's better than a group of rigid Russian policemen, stiff hips gyrating awkwardly, singing a song about fucking in English? So many things, but the addition of a smoke machine, auto-tune, and some wicked falsetto make this a pretty fun three minutes.

According to reports, the choir was practicing for a concert on Sunday at the Kremlin. Which is awesome because we should always celebrate when cops sing more and shoot less.