

ENTERTAINMENT

Russia's police choir covers 'Get Lucky' at Opening Ceremony for Olympics

February 8

The most popular song of last summer made its way to the Opening Ceremony for the Olympics in Sochi. And no, Robin Thicke and Miley were'nt involved.

The familiar tune to Daft Punk and Pharrell's "Get Lucky" began playing as a Russian police choir sang their own rendition of the American song at the Fisht Olympic Stadium in Sochi.

Most choir members looked stiff and uncomfortable, though their harmony was on point. See the spectacle below.

The familiar tune to Daft Punk and Pharrell's "Get Lucky" began playing as a Russian police choir sang their own rendition of the American song at the Fisht Olympic Stadium in Sochi.

