

Sochi Olympics: Russian Police Choir Performs Daft Punk's "Get Lucky" At Opening Ceremony

February 7, 2014 2:40 PM

Like

17

Tweet

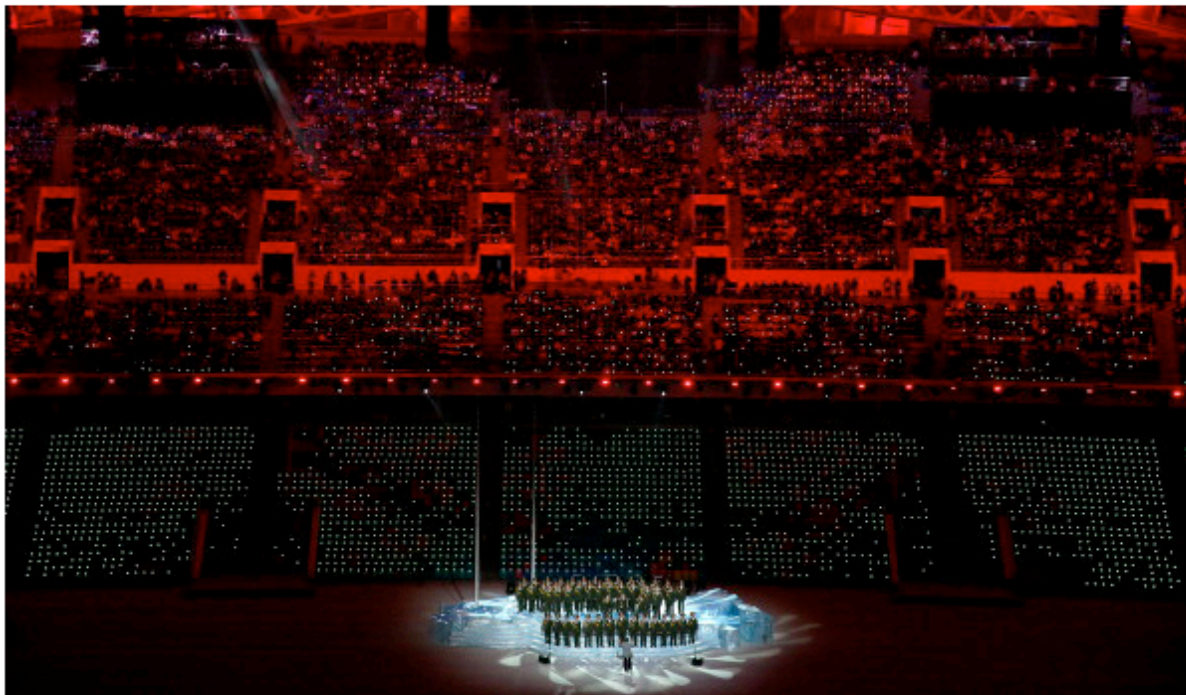

0

Share

3

View Comments

The Ministry of Internal Affairs choir sings "Get Lucky" during the pre-show of the Opening Ceremony of the Sochi 2014 Winter Olympics at Fisht Olympic Stadium on February 7, 2014 in Sochi, Russia. (Photo by Quinn Rooney/Getty Images)

Related Tags: 2014 Winter Olympics in Sochi, Daft Punk, Get Lucky, Nile Rodgers, Olympics, opening ceremony, Pharrell Williams, Sochi, Winter Olympics

There are covers, and then, there are covers.

Spectators around the world smiled when Russia's Ministry of Internal Affairs choir covered Daft Punk's "Get Lucky" during the opening ceremony of the Sochi 2014 Winter Olympics.

The choice seemed to legitimize several videos floating around on YouTube of the Red Army Choir singing the Grammy-winning hit by the French house music duo. The uniformed men dance and move about as they sing, "...we're up all night to get lucky."

"Get Lucky" features Pharrell and was co-written by Daft Punk, Pharrell and Nile Rodgers.