

Music

Russian Police Choir Perform Daft Punk's 'Get Lucky' at Olympics Opening Ceremony

February 10, 2014 10:10 AM

J' aime

5

Tweet

6

Share

1

View Comments

Related Tags: covers, daft punk, Get Lucky, olympics, RussiaBy Jay Tilles

There may be nothing odder than watching the Russian Police Choir getting funky in front of the Winter Olympics crowd in Sochi, Russia. But what is definitely even weirder is to see these uniformed men getting their groove on to Daft Punk's "Get Lucky." Yes, it seems Vladimir Putin allowed them to stay up all night to get lucky.

This Opening Ceremony rendition isn't just an elaborate lip-sync. No, no, these officers are seen letting loose and belting out the lyrics while dancing the way only middle-aged white Russian police officers can.

According to Time, this isn't the first time the officers have gotten lucky. The Russian Interior Ministry's ensemble performed the disco hit last November.

Sponsored LinksEasy Lost Data Recovery

Worried about Losing Your Data?
Make Them Safe for Just $3.95/mth!
www.backup.pcrx.com

Seabourn Luxury Cruises

Take advantage of exceptional savings. Click here for special offers!
www.seabourn.com